Kneller's Happy Campers is about people who offed themselves and meet in a "life after death"- but only with others who offed themselves. It's funny and creative. I liked the story and its weirdness. In the end I found out: there is something Etgar Keret wants to tell me about my life.

Praise for Kneller's Happy Campers Keret mixes the laconic style of Raymond Carver and the insane wit of Quentin Tarantino into his own particular, melancholy combination of themes... It's not just a story about people who have taken their lives, but rather a metaphor on how the post-ideological generation is trying to live and survive in this world.

Etgar Keret's writing hits like a bullet. Kneller's Happy Campers is fast and bizarre and full of a fearless street-punk surrealism, as though Charles Bukowski is channelling the imagination of Lewis Carroll. The darkest fun I've read in ages.
